The Seaport snow farm has finally finished melting

Trash and dirty water are all that remain of the impressive snow farm. In its heyday during the winter of 2015, the snow farm was about 100 feet tall. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Summer thaw. The last remnant of one of Boston's worst winters is finally gone.

If you had put money on the possibility of a snowbank lasting until the second week of July, yesterday was the day to cash in.

Fourteen days into July and four months removed from the most brutal winter since the 1800s, the Seaport snow farm is no longer.

Piles of rancid garbage and city grime are all that remain of a once mighty snow farm that stood at the Tide Street dumping grounds.

Managing the epic winter snowfall effectively, they said, would be improbable. Seeing the piles standing in July would be impossible. But the mighty wrath of last winter defied all logic and measurements.

There were at least eight massive piles of blizzard bounty, many of them around 100 feet high and as wide as every vacant lot that housed them. Most had melted by the time the warm weather came around, but the Seaport pile was one stubborn snowbank.

Yes, my fellow Bostonians, the winter of 2015 is now a memory and the folks who babble endlessly about enduring the Blizzard of '78 can shovel their stories of heroism and bravery somewhere else.

We survived the heaviest snowfall on record throughout the course of the shortest month of the year. Consider the prospect of 10 feet of snow falling in 25 days. Something like that might happen in Buffalo, New York, or some other unfortunate location in far away lands like Canada, but not here in Boston.

Images of the snow farms were otherworldly. Excavators and dump trucks looked like children's toys on the slopes of these impossible man-made mountains. They made chains where snow was carried up the side of the bank to a plateau, where other heavy machinery would then carry it farther up in order to make room for more loads.

Mayor Marty Walsh took to Twitter to express his joy over the melting. He had set up a contest to have lunch with the people who guessed the right date of the pile's demise. Gov. Charlie Baker also tweeted out a triumphant declaration: "Our nightmare is officially over!"

The snow farm held out due to the sludge that coated the top of the pile, absorbing the summer sun and causing the snow to solidify underneath it. Rain was the only weapon that could make a dent in the mass of filth and frozen water.

Rejoice, fellow citizens. Pour out a little bit of a drink to the memory of the mighty Seaport snow farm. May it rest in peace in the water cycle and never darken our doorsteps again.

ISIS. Boston police captain made nightmare choice to turn in son

Having to turn in your own kid is a parent's worst nightmare. Add in allegations of ISIS-inspired terror plots and a parent on the police force and the nightmare plunges into the depths of surrealistic horror.

According to the Boston Herald, this was the fate of Boston Police Capt. Robert Ciccolo and his only son, Alexander Ciccolo. Capt. Ciccolo turned his 23-year-old son over to the FBI after he started talking obsessively about ISIS.

Once he accepted that there was nothing he could do about his son's obsession, Capt. Ciccolo could only wait until his son, who had a history of mental illness, would take a fascination with violent Islamic ideology too far.

According to an FBI affidavit released on Monday, Ciccolo, also known as Ali Al Amriki, was busted with a duffel bag filled with guns as he headed toward his Adams apartment on July 4.

He was banned from buying guns after a previous criminal conviction.

He is said to have told the informant about plans to commit terrorist attacks involving IEDs like pressure-cooker bombs like the ones used in the 2013 Boston Marathon attack "in places where large numbers of people congregate, like college cafeterias," and had Molotov cocktails.

The affidavit said he had a knife with a five-inch blade and a receipt from the pressure cooker in his wallet.

During a routine medical screening at the Franklin House of Correction following his arrest, Ciccolo "grabbed a pen and forcefully stabbed the nurse in the head, leaving a hole in the nurse's skin and causing the pen to break in half."

Ciccolo appeared in federal court Tuesday to face charges of being a felon in possession of firearms, which carries a sentence of no greater than 10 years in prison, three years of supervised release and a fine of $250,000. NATE HOMAN

Police catch man suspected of years of sexual assaults

Charged. Authorities finally caught a man they believe has committed sexual assaults since 2006.

A former Uber driver charged with raping a passenger in December evaded authorities for almost a decade in a slew of other sexual assaults in South Boston and the Esplanade along the Charles River.

Suffolk County District Attorney Dan Conley announced Tuesday that DNA evidence, witness statements and "unmistakable patterns of conduct" linked Alejandro Done, 46, of the South End, with at least four instances of sexual assault. Each of these instances involved women who were walking alone on weekends during the summer months. He described these random attacks as vicious and predatory acts from a dangerous person.

The instances took place on July 29, 2006, in Joe Moakley Park in South Boston; June 16, 2007, at the Esplanade; July 27, 2007, at the Esplanade; July 13, 2009, at the Esplanade; and June 23, 2009, at Prebble Circle in South Boston.

"When you see five instances, four linked with DNA and others under investigation, where someone who does this half a dozen times, they are a very dangerous, violent sexual predator," Conley said.

"Over the years, while we did not identify the person who did this, we never forgot that several women have been horribly victimized," State Police Colonel Richard McKeon said.

"We got a dangerous felon off the street who preyed on people on the Esplanade and in South Boston," Boston Police Commissioner Bill Evans said. "In 2006, it made the community on edge and we were never able to solve what had happened in Moakley Park. We never gave up on this case. Someone might get away with something today or tomorrow, but when we have victims who are assaulted so viciously, it's good to know that we never give up."

State Police Colonel Richard D. McKeon announced a suspect has been caught. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

Done, who has no prior criminal record, is expected to be arraigned on Wednesday.

Technology. Kendall Square bike counter aims to promote cycling

Cyclists are constantly peddling through the Boston area, and with the summer weather more people are choosing biking over taking public transportation or driving.

That's why Cambridge installed the "eco-totem" cyclist counter in Kendall Square to tally the number of cyclists that ride by the area each day. The counter also displays the cumulative totals since its installation.

The city of Cambridge representatives said they would like to promote cycling as a healthy, environmentally friendly way of getting around. This is believed to be an important part of the city's efforts to improve mobility and protect the environment.

"I've been biking on this road for 10 years" said resident Raymond Salvo. "It's hard for me to believe that more people don't bike because the benefits are so well known. It's cheaper, faster and healthier," he said.

A new bike counter in Cambridge counts each cyclist that rides by. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

Cambridge reports that the percentage of Cantabrigians who commute by bicycle has been rising steadily over the past two decades. Local surveys suggest that from seven to nine percent of Cambridge residents commute to work by bike.

Since the counter was first installed on June 23, there have been more than 28,200 counts. The counter aims to make the statement that "bicyclists count," analyze bicyclists' patterns depending on seasonal, daily, monthly or weekly changes, and help facilitate crash-rate analysis.

Passing cyclists had mixed feelings about the counter. "In my opinion, the bike lanes are way more effective in encouraging people to cycle. They make it safer and more reasonable," said Jeff Peters, a 66-year-old Cambridge resident.

It's possible that the counter isn't the motivating tool behind the increased numbers of bikers. "I guess it's kind of like a pat on the back," said David Southerland, 22, a cyclist heading to lunch. "But I already bike every day. I'm all for biking as an alternative to other forms of transportation … Not because of a counter, but because of all the other benefits" KEELA SWEENEY

Hub among most likely to feel impact of climate change

Study. A Weather Channel study ranked the city sixth among vulnerable urban locales nationwide.

Brace yourselves, Boston. Climate change is coming. As a dense coastal city that knows the power of Mother Nature when it comes to ungodly piles of snow, the gradual warming and moistening of the planet is slated to hit the Hub especially hard.

That's according to a study produced by the Weather Channel, which lists Boston sixth among a list of cities most likely to feel the impacts of climate change.

"More extreme precipitation events," the study reads — like, for example, the record-breaking snowfall we experienced, "are expected across Massachusetts and up and down the eastern seaboard — the same areas potentially in trouble from rising sea levels and future storms."

Authors of the weather media giant's study used six metrics in making their rankings, among them how catastrophic rising sea levels could be and how vulnerable an area is to "urban heat islands," or cities that are hotter than rural areas.

Climate scientists Katharine Hayhoe of Texas Tech University, Michael Mann of Penn State's Earth System Science Center and David Easterling of NOAA's National Centers for Environmental Information contributed to the rankings.

TWC gave New Orleans the top spot. No surprises there.

What's Boston doing?

The study cites two city initiatives designed to combat climate change: Grow Boston Greener, a city grant-sponsored campaign to plant 100,000 new trees by 2020, and Boston Complete Streets, a program that aims to spur road design that caters to bikers, walkers and public transportation.

Landmark Iran nuclear deal reached

Agreement. It will now be debated in Congress, but Obama said he would veto any measure to block it.

Iran and six major world powers reached a nuclear deal on Tuesday, capping more than a decade of negotiations with an agreement that could transform the Middle East.

President Barack Obama hailed a step toward a "more hopeful world" and Iran's President Hassan Rouhani said it proved that "constructive engagement works." But Israel pledged to do what it could to halt what it called an "historic surrender."

Under the deal, sanctions imposed by the United States, European Union and United Nations will be lifted in return for Iran agreeing long-term curbs on a nuclear program that the West has suspected was aimed at creating a nuclear bomb.

Iran will mothball for at least a decade the majority of its centrifuges used to enrich uranium and sharply reduce its low-enriched uranium stockpile.

The agreement is a political triumph for both Obama, who has long promised to reach out to historic enemies, and Rouhani, a pragmatist elected two years ago on a vow to reduce the isolation of his nation of 80 million people.

Both face skepticism from powerful hardliners at home in nations that referred to each other as "the Great Satan" and a member of the "Axis of Evil."

"Today is the end to acts of tyranny against our nation and the start of cooperation with the world," Rouhani said in a televised address. "This is a reciprocal deal. If they stick to it, we will. The Iranian nation has always observed its promises and treaties."

Delighted Iranians danced in the streets of Tehran, while motorists sounded car horns and flashed victory signs in celebration after the announcement of a deal they hope will end years of sanctions and isolation. REUTERS

"This deal offers an opportunity to move in a new direction. ... We should seize it."

Obama

Republicans

Iran deal faces skeptics

Republicans lined up to denounce the deal. Presidential candidate Lindsey Graham, a senator from South Carolina, called it a terrible deal that would make matters worse. Sen. Marco Rubio suggested he would reintroduce sanctions if elected to the White House.

The Republican-controlled Congress has 60 days to review the accord, but if it votes to reject it Obama can use his veto, which can be overridden only by two-thirds of lawmakers in both houses. That means dozens of Obama's fellow Democrats would have to rebel against one of their president's signature achievements to kill it, an unlikely prospect.

Leading Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton called the deal "an important step that puts the lid on Iran's nuclear programs."

The Senate was not expected to vote on the deal before September.

While the main negotiations were between the United States and Iran, the four other U.N. Security Council permanent members, Britain, China, France and Russia, are also parties to the deal, as is Germany.

Iran is the predominant Shi'ite Muslim power, hostile both to Israel and to Washington's Sunni Muslim-ruled Arab friends, particularly Saudi Arabia. Allies of Riyadh and Tehran have fought decades of sectarian proxy wars in Syria, Lebanon, Iraq and Yemen. REUTERS

US spacecraft sails by Pluto, capping 9-year journey

A U.S. spacecraft sailed past the tiny dwarf planet Pluto in the most distant reaches of the solar system on Tuesday, capping a journey of 3 billion miles that began nine and a half years ago.

NASA's New Horizons spacecraft passed by the ice-and-rock planetoid and its entourage of five moons at 7:49 a.m. Eastern. The event culminated an initiative to explore the solar system that the space agency embarked upon more than 50 years ago.

"It's truly a mark in human history," John Grunsfeld, NASA's associate administrator for science, said from the mission control center at Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory outside Baltimore.

New Horizons was expected to continue observing Pluto for several hours after it made its closest approach to the unexplored world, coming within 7,750 miles of the sphere. REUTERS

Family of NY choke-hold victim renews calls to charge officer

The family of Eric Garner, a black man who died after a white police officer put him in a choke hold a year ago, renewed calls to criminally charge the police officer on Tuesday, a day after the family reached a $5.9 million settlement with New York City.

A grand jury in December declined to indict the officer, Daniel Pantaleo, who placed Garner, 43, in the choke hold, a maneuver banned by the New York City Police Department. A video that a bystander took of the incident sparked protests across the country over police treatment of minority groups.

Wal-Mart sued for denying health care to gay worker's wife

A Wal-Mart Stores employee sued the retailer on Tuesday, saying its prior policy of denying health insurance to the spouses of gay employees violated gender discrimination laws.

The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Boston, seeks nationwide class-action status.

Wal-Mart, the largest private U.S. employer, began offering health insurance benefits to same-sex spouses last year, after the U.S. Supreme Court in 2013 struck down part of the Defense of Marriage Act that denied federal benefits to married gay couples.

Scarred by Islamist attacks, Kenya set to re-open trendy Westgate mall

Kenya's Westgate shopping mall will reopen on Saturday, nearly two years after gunmen from the Somali militant group al Shabaab massacred at least 67 people inside and held out for four days as security forces laid siege to the complex.

Once a totem of Kenya's growing prosperity, the Westgate building has since become symbolic of growing insecurity in the east African nation and President Uhuru Kenyatta's inability to prevent frequent Islamist attacks on Kenyan soil.

Images beamed across the world during the raid dented Kenya's image abroad and scared off tourists, hurting a vital sector of the economy. Kenya's embarrassment was compounded by Westgate security footage that showed soldiers looting the mall after the Somali militants were killed. REUTERS

PETA. 'SeaWorld worker infiltrated us, posing as violent activist'

The animal rights group PETA said it has been infiltrated by a SeaWorld employee posing as an activist.

SeaWorld is the aquatic animal theme park that has been the target of PETA criticism and a growing campaign to shut down its three locations in Orlando, Florida; San Antonio and San Diego.

"For three years, a man calling himself 'Thomas Jones' has been attending PETA protests at SeaWorld and organizational meetings, trying to get close to PETA employees," People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals says on its website.

"PETA's work to educate people about SeaWorld has apparently made the company so upset that it created a corporate espionage campaign," the group alleged.

PETA alleged that "Thomas Jones" has also been posting inflammatory messages on social media, trying to incite illegal actions such as calls to "burn [SeaWorld] to the ground" and "drain the new tanks at #SeaWorld."

An investigation of "Thomas Jones" has revealed that he is actually Paul T. McComb, a human resources employee at SeaWorld San Diego.

SeaWorld has remained mum on the allegations, refusing to discuss Jones/McComb. McComb hung up when reached on his cellphone.

The theme park defends itself further on its website: "We care for 30 killer whales, the largest killer whale population in a zoological facility worldwide. They are our family.

"We are a global leader in the care and understanding of this species and are accredited by the world's foremost professional zoological organizations. We apply best practices in behavioral training, environmental enrichment, preventive health, veterinary medicine and facilities design and management.

"As with all animals at SeaWorld, the whales live in safe, sophisticated habitats, receive world-class medical care and are continually engaged socially, mentally and physically.

"These animals are healthy and well adapted to their surroundings, a fact that is evident to our zoological experts through their constant interaction and observation 24 hours per day."

JOHN A. OSWALD

Quoted

"We are focused on the safety of our team members, guests and animals, and beyond that we do not comment on our security operations ... This is a responsibility that we take very seriously, especially as animal rights groups have become increasingly extreme in their rhetoric and tactics."

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Considering the average One Direction fan isn't even old enough to drive yet, it comes as a shock that Louis Tomlinson will soon become a father. No, this is not one of 1D's notorious jokes. This is legit. People reports that Tomlinson's stylist Briana Jungwirth is pregnant with his child. Hey, at least that is going to be one well-dressed kid.

We can only assume Tomlinson's longtime girlfriend Eleanor Calder is a little bitter that Jungwirth has cemented a forever bond with the boy band member (and that cash flow) while she will go down in history as just a fling. As to how Tomlinson is feeling about the whole thing, People's "source" says, "It was a surprise at first, but he and Briana are very, very close friends and this has brought them even closer." Brandy's failed subway busking

Current "Chicago" star Brandy decided to try belting out a tune while riding the 1 train recently, and the results were less than career-affirming. "What you all thought of that? You thought that was cool?" she asks after serenading the straphangers, turning to her fellow riders — who don't even make eye contact. "Nobody heard me singing? Nobody thought that was cool?" Way harsh, Upper West Siders. But at least one rider — when pressed by Brandy directly — had some advice for her, suggesting she wasn't selling herself strongly enough. "You've got talent, you've got to go for it," he offers. "We've seen this a million times, you've got to do something different."

Recognize her now?

Hogwarts is expensive, yo

Private schools are pricey, we all know that. But what about fictional private schools that teach your kids how to make the most of their supernatural powers? The industrious folks at Mic scoured J.K. Rowling's books, the Pottermore online community and some fan wikis to determine that a magical kid's first year at Hogwarts School for Witchcraft and Wizardry would run $43,031 to cover tuition ($42,000) and supplies ($1,031). Though, to be fair, you could probably shop around and get a cauldron off Amazon for less than $140. I'm going to go out on a limb and say the Weasley kids were really good at scoring scholarships.

Avid male celebrity jewelry watchers were probably a bit confused by Ben Affleck's wedding ring choices while out and about at Comic-Con. First he popped up on the Hall H panel still wearing the ring, despite the fact that a recently announced divorce from Jennifer Garner is in the works. Then he was seen walking the Convention Center floor sans wedding band, like maybe he belatedly remembered to take it off. But then at an autograph-signing session at the Warner Bros. booth, it was back on again. Well, hopefully this clears things up: Now back in L.A., Affleck has been spotted with a bare left ring finger. We'll update you immediately if the finger's condition changes. Also, if he was looking to replace it, Comic-Con would've been a great place to pick up a replica One Ring from "The Lord of the Rings."

Tig on 'Tig'

Interview. The comedian talks about the documentary following her life after her game-changing stand-up set.

"Tig" premieres on Netflix this Friday. / NETFLIX

Tig Notaro might have had the most roller-coaster year of anyone ever back in 2012. In quick succession, the comedian was hospitalized due to a bacterial infection, lost her mother in a freak accident and then was diagnosed with cancer. It was a trio of events so awful, it was unbelievable it all happened to one person. Soon after the cancer diagnosis, Notaro took the stage at the Largo in LA to do a stand-up set about what had happened. The result was nothing short of an Internet storm, with Louis CK tweeting that it was one of the best sets he'd ever seen. Now in a much better place, Notaro has a documentary coming out about the aftermath of it all.

How did you end up deciding to do the film?
Well, one of the directors, Kristina Goolsby, is an old friend of mine of almost twenty years and I had known she wanted to make this documentary. So when she brought it up, I said yes because I thought it would be a cool thing to do, and I also wanted to support her. And I guess there was a part of me that thought it wouldn't really get going. There are just so many projects that people suggest or try to get started. You say yes to stuff and it peters out.

Even though people had been so interested in your stand-up set?
Yeah, people are so bored so quickly. I remember asking my manager in 2012, I was like, "Gosh, when do you think this interest is going to die down?" Because I kept thinking it would be in two days or two weeks. And he was like, "Yeah, I don't see this going away." I was like, "Really?"

The set became a huge sensation online. Do you remember thinking during it that people were being unusually responsive, that this could end up being life-changing?
Well, I didn't think it was life-changing because I thought I could possibly be not living. I was happy that I was getting through the set and it wasn't a completely uncomfortable thing start to finish. When I went onstage that night I thought it would just be a nonstop uncomfortable thing, and it ended up being what it is, which is an uncomfortable, funny, I guess, emotional thing.

Life on camera

Did you have any discussions with the director about what you were willing to have filmed from your life?
No, I was pretty naive about things when we started because I had just been through such a rough period in my life that I sort of assumed that I was out of the woods as far as anything bad happening. I really naively thought I'd be running into nothing but wonderful things in life, and of course I have, and it's been great, but it's life and swings in every direction. So when there were highs and lows, I just wanted to make myself available for it all, because if I agreed to do the film I wanted it to be the best possible version.

You don't have an awareness of things when you're in the middle of it, usually.

The film covers your anxiety about performing after the big set. Do you feel like you're past that now?
I feel leaps and bounds beyond that. I feel so good about all my new material. I just want to do what I think is the funniest stuff, and that's all I can do, really.

High- and lowbrow with Laura Linney

Interview. The Oscar nominee talks "Mr. Holmes" and why she did the second "Ninja Turtles" movie.

In "Mr. Holmes," Laura Linney plays housekeeper to old Sherlock Holmes (Ian McKellen).
ROADSIDE ATTRACTIONS

In Bill Condon's new drama "Mr. Holmes," Ian McKellen plays an elderly Sherlock Holmes, grumpily bouncing about a country home, reflecting on an old case from his detective days. Laura Linney plays his unhappy housekeeper, whose son strikes up a friendship with her boss. It could have been a nothing part for the acclaimed actress, but even if it had that would have been fine with her. Linney talks to us about the quiet depths of her role — and the fun the three-time Oscar nominee had making the second "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

GETTY IMAGES

I read you've been a Holmes nerd since you were a kid. What first got you into him?
I think I was so attracted to the character as a young preadolescent just because he was so sexy. Honestly. He was this brilliant loner-musician-drug addict — heartthrob, basically. He's a brilliant, brilliant man who's mysterious and very detached and not connected to anyone. Any woman would find that very attractive.

Your character doesn't have a ton of screentime, but she still has a lot going on.
I would have done the movie even if the character didn't intrigue me. Quite honestly, that was secondary to being able to work with Bill [Condon], being able to work with Ian, being able to go to England, being in a Sherlock Holmes movie. I couldn't have cared less what the character was. However, much to my delight, the character's really interesting. She's a war widow. She's struggling to normalize her life and maintain a relationship with her young child. She's a housekeeper who was probably never a housekeeper before. There's her loneliness, her hard work, her disorientation of being widowed. It's what happened after the war, how it tore families apart, how it relocated people.

Did you meet McKellen back when you two did "Armistead Maupin's Tales of the City" back in 1993?
We both have Armistead Maupin in common. Armistead has always been a great friend of Ian's, and I became very close to Armistead through making those series. My son's middle name is Armistead; I named him after him. I would spend 10 minutes with [Ian] here, 15 minutes with him there, over a long period of time. But I never knew him very well. So now I was able to spend time with him and claim him as my own.

One more thing

Having fun for a change

Linney recently wrapped on a film unlike most of the serious dramas she does: the second "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" movie. How did she find it? "I had a great time! I loved it! I had a wonderful time! It was really fun!" she says. "I didn't have to cry, there was no nudity, there was no deep, deep psychological pain going on for my character. It was filmed at home. I just had a ball. It was nice to skip to work and skip home."

Though she loves heavy movies like "Mr. Holmes," they can be taxing. "There was a lot going on. There was an accent," she explains. "It was wonderful. But there was sadness there, and fear. When you inhabit that all day long you learn how to slip in and out of it so it doesn't contaminate your life. But it does cost a little bit. You're tired when you go home. You have to access things that aren't always comfortable. So to be able to do a cartoon film, it was fun!"

Aries Be careful when playing sports or participating in a physical endeavor. You risk injury if you take on too much. If you need help, ask those with experience.

Taurus Put the past behind you. Carrying a grudge or romanticizing a failed love affair will keep you from moving forward.

Gemini Don't wait for someone else to sing your praises. Show others your true colors. Be honest about your cares.

Cancer You will have disagreements with friends or colleagues if you aren't careful, leading to ongoing problems that will boost your blood pressure.

Leo Someone will try to get you to do their dirty work for them. Don't pass along comments that could wound or intimidate others.

Virgo Stimulating ideas will spur creative projects that could help you in your professional career. Your attitude will catch the eye of superiors.

Scorpio By getting back to your roots, you will gain perspective on where you are and where you are headed. Enlist the aid of relatives.

Sagittarius You will be asked to mediate an argument. Stick to the facts in order to avoid inflaming tempers and being blamed for interfering.

Beyond the bank robbers

LINDA CLARKE
letters@metro.us

Charlestown's reputation as being ground zero for bank robbers aside, this neighborhood is packed with history and has some of Boston's most interesting traditional architecture. That, and its proximity to Boston proper, is what makes it one of the area's hottest neighborhoods to live in.

"People have been flocking here in recent years," says David Stenberg, senior vice president of Hammond Real Estate. "That's been the case for a couple of years, but it's certainly been true for the first half of this year. Homes have been selling at a very fast pace in Charlestown.

"I report on different neighborhoods around Boston and without question Charlestown has been hottest this year," he continues. "The prices still aren't as high as the Back Bay, South End or Beacon Hill, and the housing stock is similar."

A game of cat and mouse

Since the housing market recovery this decade, trying to find a home for sale in Charlestown over the past couple of years has increasingly become a game of cat and mouse: When a condo hits the market, it's usually snapped up immediately, which means prices have increased and will likely remain strong for sellers. "I just updated my midyear report," says Stenberg, "and the average condo price in Charlestown is $620,000. A year ago it was $590,000 and in June 2011 it was $450,000. That's a 40 percent increase."

Home buyers, don't despair

There is one piece of good news: 2015 saw an increase in homes up for sale. "My figures for the end of June 2011 show 119 condos available. This year there were 26. It is still limited, but that is starting to change. In fact, this year showed an increase, because at the end of June 2014 there were 17 condos," says Stenberg. "We started to see an increase of inventory this spring. While demand is strong, as inventory increases it gives balance between the buyer and seller."

What you can get

Currently on the market on Sullivan Street is a three-bedroom, three-bathroom penthouse, which is part of an 1880-built multifamily. It has a private entrance and about 2,200 square feet of living space. The open-plan living/dining area has nine-foot ceilings and a gas fireplace. The master bedroom suite features a walk-in closet, an additional sitting/reading area with a bay window and a bathroom with a Jacuzzi tub and a custom-built glass shower. The top floor has direct access to the private roof deck. Price: $899,000

Dana-Farber offers five tips to stay safe in the sun

During the summer months many people head out to the beach to escape the hot temperatures. But before you spend time in the sun, Dana-Farber Cancer Institute has a few tips to protect your skin and lower your risk of developing skin cancer:

1. Do not use tanning booths
   Don't hit the tanning bed for a "base tan" before you hit the beach. Tanning booths contain UVA rays, which can raise the risk for developing melanoma, the rarest and most aggressive form of skin cancer. Getting a base tan won't stop you from burning at the beach, either.
2. Use protective clothing
   It's easy to forget sun block at home, or forget to reapply. Hats and long-sleeved clothing often beat reapplying sunscreen. Protect yourself with a wide-brimmed hat or baseball cap, and don't be afraid to wear long sleeves or cover-ups. Wear sunglasses to protect your eyes from the sun as well.
3. Know your skin
   It's important to know your skin tone; some people are not meant to spend excess time in the sun. Fair-skinned people (freckles, blue eyes, red hair, and white skin) are at a higher risk of burning and should be extra careful in the sun. Sunburns, particularly blistering sunburns in your youth are associated with an increased risk of developing melanoma.
4. Apply sunscreen
   Use a sunscreen with an SPF of 30 or higher and reapply every two hours. It's also important to reapply after excessive sweating or swimming. Most people also don't put on enough sunscreen. A shot glass (two tablespoons) of sunscreen is needed for your face and exposed areas of the skin. If you are using a spray, use enough to get an even coating, and rub in to prevent missed spots. Apply chemical sunscreens 15 minutes prior to sun exposure as these sunscreens work better when absorbed.
5. Avoid excessive exposure
   The sun is strongest between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Don't spend excessive amounts of time in the sun during those hours. If you do spend a long time outside, make sure to apply a sun block that is SPF 30 or higher and reapply every two hours. If you are planning a beach day, try to go later in the day when the sun isn't as strong and harmful. Also, find an umbrella, cover up and go inside during the middle of the day.

Be smart about your sun exposure. Do the activities that you love to do but minimize exposure by performing the activities in the early morning and evening when the UV rays are less intense.

For second straight year, Revs in a summer swoon

MLS. The Revolution are in a major funk halfway through their 2015 season.

Revs goalkeeper Bobby Shuttleworth, left, has been under fire for two months now. / GETTY IMAGES

This summer has not been kind to the Revolution. Since their 2-1 win over the Red Bulls on May 2 at Gillette Stadium, New England (6-9-6) has just one victory (2-0 vs. Chicago on June 13 in Foxborough) in its last 12 league matches (1-7-4). That bleak stretch includes a 4-1 shellacking in New Jersey on Saturday in which the Red Bulls (7-6-5) took a 3-0 lead in the first 12 minutes. It was the Revs' second straight defeat by three goals (3-0 at Dallas on July 4), which in the sport of soccer basically qualifies as a blowout.

Some actual good news for the Revs is that other than DC United, which has an MLS-best 35 points, the other eight teams in the Eastern Conference can be described as mediocre at best. Believe it or not, New England is still hanging on to the sixth spot (the last playoff berth) in the East after being in second-place before this nightmare began. The Revs are only two points behind the second-place Red Bulls (7-6-5) and are six points ahead of last-place Chicago (5-9-3).

If there was any doubt as to who was the Revolution's most valuable player, midfielder Jermaine Jones' extended absence (out since May 31 with a groin injury) has quickly settled that debate. Still, soccer is about all 11 players on the field, meaning that one player shouldn't make or break a team's ultimate success. New England head coach Jay Heaps is clearly frustrated as he tries everything in his power to get the team back on the winning track.

"It's not good enough across the board," he said after the loss to the Red Bulls. "We have to be better and we have to hold ourselves accountable. We as a staff, we have to get the guys playing better and right now we're not doing it."

This isn't completely new territory for New England, which suffered a similar ugly stretch last season but overcame it well enough to win the Eastern Conference and reach the MLS Cup. This weekend seems like the perfect time to grab a win as New England hosts New York City FC (5-8-6) on Saturday (7:30 p.m., CSNNE) at Gillette. New York is in ninth-place in the East, but it figures to get an immediate boost with the expected debut of English midfielder Frank Lampard, who just transferred to MLS from Premier League powerhouse Manchester City.

Celtics land athletic Jones for next to nothing

Perry Jones averaged 4.3 points per game this past season. / GETTY IMAGES

The Celtics more or less acquired forward Perry Jones III for free from Oklahoma City Tuesday as the Thunder will rid themselves of $7 million in salary and potential luxury tax problems.

Boston gave up a protected 2018 second-round pick in the deal and also acquired a second round pick. They will only have to pay Jones a little over $2 million in 2015-16, assuming he makes the team.

Thunder star Kevin Durant once said that Jones was "the best athlete in the league" as the former Baylor star can jump out of the gym. The 23-year-old Jones was the 28th overall pick in the 2012 draft and was linked to the Celtics in many mock drafts that summer. The C's instead selected Syracuse's Fab Melo, who now plays professionally in Puerto Rico.

Jones played exceptionally well early in the 2014-15 season as he filled in for the injured Durant. He scored a career-high 32 points and grabbed seven boards against the Clippers on Oct. 30, 2014. But there were far too many nights like the one that occurred on Jan. 28, 2015 in an OKC loss to the lowly Knicks in which Jones played big minutes and didn't produce. In that game, he did not score, had two turnovers and three fouls. Jones quickly fell out of favor with the Thunder coaching staff after that game and only played 20 or more minutes one more time the rest of the season.

Serena dating Drake?

South African publication Times Now reported this week that recently crowned Wimbledon champion Serena Williams and hip-hop star Drake were dating. "Publicly she says they're just friends but Drake has been by Serena's side throughout the tournament and when they've been away from the public and relaxed, it's been pretty obvious that they are together," a source told Times Now. Drake was present at Wimbledon but Williams denied the two were an item last week. "It's about luck," she said of Drake's presence. "You got to keep your luck around. We've been friends for like, so many years, just like family."

Pirates (53-35)

The Pirates took three of four from the Cardinals to claim the top spot in our rankings and move within 2.5 games of St. Louis in the NL Central race.

No. 2

Cardinals (56-33)

St. Louis still holds the best home and overall record in baseball. They've played 42 home games to 47 on the road.

No. 3

Royals (52-34)

Kansas City enters the break hot, as an 8-2 mark in their last 10 kept them from losing any ground to the Twins.

No. 4

Dodgers (51-39)

The Dodgers keep on keeping on, and enter the All-Star break with a comfortable 4.5 game lead on the Giants.

No. 5

Angels (48-40)

The Angels have taken advantage of the Astros' struggles by posting a 7-3 mark in their last 10 leading to the break.

No. 6

Yankees (48-40)

The Yankees have also won seven of 10, and it's helped them grab a little breathing room in the tight AL East.

No. 7

Nationals (48-39)

The Nationals are still on top of the NL East, but a big series against the Dodgers looms after the break.

No. 8

Twins (49-40)

The Twins posted a 7-3 record in their last 10 games — and dropped a game back from Kansas City.

No. 9

Astros (49-42)

Houston has done a ton right this season, but not much right the past week. They dropped their last six.

No. 10

Mets (47-42)

Overall the Mets have won seven of the last 10 to close to within two games of the Nationals in the NL East race.

No. 11

Cubs (47-40)

The division is slipping away for the Cubs, who are unable to keep up with the pace the Cardinals and Pirates are setting.
